Roblox is a free, massively multiplayer online game development platform. Users can create virtual worlds and games (codenamed "Robloxians") by scripting programming code in the user-friendly Lua programming language and graphical user interface (GUI). When creating a game, Robloxians can play and interact with one another inside of their games. All interaction in a Roblox game is asynchronous, meaning it can be paused and resumed at any time. This allows the community to create games that are often highly interactive. With features such as dynamic 3D graphics, physics, and natural user interfaces (NUI), Roblox games are similar to video games. The purpose of Roblox is to give Robloxians of any age the opportunity to make their own games and play with other users. Some Robloxians create large immersive environments and gaming worlds, while others create short experiences with simple gameplay mechanics. Roblox, as an online game development platform, allows Robloxians to easily share their games with others. Users can play anywhere or any time on their own devices. Roblox is free to play and does not require the purchase of any additional content or subscriptions.
